Madam CJ Walker – initiative

Sarah Breedlove was born in 1867 in Louisiana. This was two years after slavery was abolished. She was the first non-slave member of her family. When she was only seven years old, her parents died. Sarah went to live with her older sister.

Later in life, Sarah Breedlove married Charles Walker. She was working as a laundress washing clothes when she started to lose her hair. Taking the initiative, she looked for treatment. When Sarah found something that worked, she began experimenting to create her own hair products which specifically suited the needs of African American women.

Sarah showed initiative and sold her products door to door. She became a successful business woman, turning her home-made products into an enormous nationwide business called Madam CJ Walker.

Sarah also set up a training school and trained thousands of women as sales people. This helped these women to also earn an income.

Sarah, or Madam CJ Walker, became America's first black woman millionaire.

Sarah showed initiative in many other ways by providing money to pay for women to go to university. She also provided money for many organisations and charities which helped ex-slaves and the children of slaves to improve their lives.

What is initiative?

Seeing something that needs to be done and taking the necessary action.
